

Above Left: The Watt School of Irish Dancers

Top and Bottom: Dancers break off in groups of four and move with relative speed across the floor, to very lively celtic music.

Two thirds of The Watt School of Irish Dancing, Fort St. John, recently brought home several prizes from a competition in Red Deer, Alberta. Two dancers from the group of sixty dancers, won the right to compete with 2,000 dancers at the worlds in Dublin, Ireland October, 1993.

Aisling Watt will compete but Carmen Timmins won't be able to. Competitions are called a Feis, pronounced fesh, gaelic for festival. The Watt school have been dancing for six years and competing for three, they are the newest school in competition.

The colorful costumes have traditional symbols such as harps, the cladagh ring and shamrocks. The dancers are waiting for new, saphire blue dresses, to come from Ireland.